

Jeff Hobbs primarily practices in the commercial, real estate, and construction litigation areas. He handles disputes involving a wide variety of matters, including breach of contract, land use and entitlements, professional and fiduciary liability, fraud and misrepresentation, Deceptive Trade Practices Act, construction, mechanic's liens, commercial leases, community association and condominium governance, and partnership, shareholder, and other entity matters. His clients have included real estate developers and investors, home builders, real estate brokers, property owners and condominium associations, commercial contractors, small businesses, individuals, and cities, counties, utility districts and other governmental entities.

Jeff has represented clients at the trial and appellate levels in state and federal courts, as well as arbitration. Since joining Armbrust & Brown in 2003, he has handled as first or second chair over 20 trials and arbitrations to final verdict or award, and several appeals as lead or co-counsel in the Texas courts of appeal and Supreme Court of Texas.

Prior to joining the firm, Jeff worked at Vinson & Elkins, where he handled complex litigation matters in the areas of professional liability, securities and other corporate transactions, and real estate.
